What a beautiful lesson in morals-what a stern and vigorous rebuke to the idle habit of swearing. What an example of judicial purity. Practical morality should be conspicuous in the judiciary. A man who takes the 'name of the Lord in vain' is not fit to administer justice, however varied may be his qualifications as a lawyer or high his intellectual grade. The force of example renders it exceedingly wrong. So much for the moral era.

In the early settlement of the Village and Distriet men fraternized upon common principles. If he was honest, of industrious habits, as well as decidedly republican, they asked no more. Such a one they were willing to take under their own vine different in the pleasant days of the past from the present regime. Then every man acted from generous impulses and indulged his social appetite as he listed. The social glass and sparkling bowl were sipped in attestation of the sociality cherished for each other. If one indulged in too copious potations they reformed him by wholesome counsel 'and generous treatment. His amendment was the result of tender care and untiring solicitude. He hever lost caste if the tempter overtook him. It was reserved for the present time, 1856, to amend by condemnation, to rectify mundlin propensities by direct, open and stern rebuke. How the two systems work the reader must determine. Soft words avert wrath, was the motto of the then age; ungentle reproof, verbal frictions, overt censure, the golden rule of the name age. While such a lenien, $9 per bbl. rule obtained in regard to social glasses, there was more public intemperance than now. Example, so far as it exerts a deleterious influence, was allowed to net with all its potency and force upon the public mind. The consequence was that there was a more incorrect moral sense prevailing, a more vitiated public sentiment in regard to the uses of alcohole preparations than now. We Trink, too, that there must have existed a lower standard of morals than is set up in the present age, as the habit of drinking was more general, alan at universal.

Wherever intemperance privails, the moral sense acquires an obtuseness more deplorable than from any single evil. Such is the result of my experiences and observations. We would therefore im pose upon such a habit some wholesome restrictions, would bring to bear upon it the corrective power of an enlightened public sentiment. Such a course is the only available one left for pursuit
He who talks about legislation as being more effectual talks drivelling nonsense, and is an insane babbler. The public taste in this particular is parer now than it ever has been. The radical parer now than it ever has been. The radical talks are very much divided in opinion on the subject. It must be admitted, however, that, after all, a mode of expelling these worms, and purifying the body from their presence, is of more value than which have been caplayed. The tendency of the been checked, and the good sense and sober judg | toners. ment of the people quickened and enlightened from the causes at which we have hinted. Wherever the reform precedes the approving sense of the people, its progress becomes retarded and the reform itself assumes a shape and mien so fictifious as to provoke the deprecation of all good men. The vocabulary of the present age has no word expressive of friendship—the place of that single mount is filled with the words per centum. If you want pecuniary assistance, the primary question for solution is, how much profit I can real ze by my accommodations. If none can be made, no aid is given.
